About the Conference

Covid-19 presented unpredictable situations to social workers to quickly adapt to health, social and economic crises. It exposed the gap between national pandemic preparedness and the role of social workers in emergency. The recent development in the field of science, humanities and education have a huge impact on our lives particularly education; all of sudden it was moved to online platform within weeks from classroom. Physical movement, internship and projects were postponed. This rapid shift in education created technical and psycho-social complexities which affected students, teachers, and researchers across the globe. So this three day virtual International Conference provides the platform for experts and researchers in the field of education, science and humanities to exchange and discuss policies and practices of dealing with global pandemic caused by Covid-19. This Conference, explores the long term effect of Pandemic on an education, literature, psycho-social and economic life.
